India's development journey has entered a decisive phase. The national aspiration of Viksit Bharat requires not only higher growth, but better growth—growth that reaches beyond metropolitan centres, creates meaningful livelihoods, reduces inequality and remains ecologically sustainable. This is the context in which SKOCH convenes this conference on Inclusive Growth.

SKOCH defines inclusive growth as spatially dispersed, job generative, equitable and sustainable. This definition reflects the reality that growth cannot be judged only by aggregate output or headline investment. It must be assessed by where it occurs, whom it benefits, how many livelihoods it creates, and whether it strengthens or weakens the ecological foundations on which society and the economy depend.
