0903-0910	Opening Remarks: Mr R K Bajaj, Distinguished Fellow, Skoch Development Foundation & Former Chief Commissioner - Income Tax, Gurgaon
	To deliver on the promise of Smart India and Shreshta Bharat few further inventions, innovations or programs are required. A broad vision has already been articulated and several schemes are at work. The question really is how far are we willing to accept and implement solutions already available and the role of planner and regulator in the context. Recent move of TRAI to mandate eKYC for all new mobile customers is one huge step in that direction. It is similar to the Bank Computerization push by Rangarajan Committee or the policy decision on computerizations of stock exchanges to take trading online. Who will take similar sectoral calls? What are the possibilities in health, transport and education sectors? Can we switch to e-Payments entirely? Our panel of experts discusses this and more.

	Dematerializing of shares and setting up of depositories, online trading etc. placed Indian financial markets amongst the top in the world. The Indian reforms story would have been still born if this was not unfolding in tandem. We are at a point of similar change vis-à-vis digitization of various records, be it health, education, property, motor vehicles etc. The provision of digital lockers coupled with Aadhar and legal sanctity and acceptance of all documents in a dematerialized form can yield productivity and economic impact which would surpass the impact of stock market, railway and banking computerization combined. How close are we to this dream? Do we have the governance will to implement this mother of all administrative reforms? We have a panel of experts trying to return recommendations on what can be done.

1000-1100	Power Panel: Changing Governance Paradigms
	The citizenry today is putting a never before pressure on the governance structures for delivery using social media, electronic media, voicing their dissatisfaction louder than ever using the power of technology to the hilt. Good governance is everybody's job and no longer restricted to the silos of IT departments etc. How are governments in India coping up with this and what are the response mechanisms? Is a horizontal as well as vertical integration of governance at hand? How real is citizen grievance redressal and what are the transformative use cases that can help deliver closer to the citizen expectation. Our panel of experts from the states and the center tries to address some of these issues.

1200-1300	Panel Discussion - The Planning Gap in Infrastructure and Urban Development
	It is uncanny as to how the most ambitiously designed infrastructure projects in India tend to reach capacity and choke practically at the time of the start itself. Be it toll roads, airports, cities etc. The story keeps getting repeated. Is it that projections are kept conservative to give the concessionaire an unfair gain? Is it that our vision is too narrow or our system allows only for incremental improvement planning instead of transformational planning? Or, it is simply too short a planning horizon – while the project financing may run into 25-30 years, the project crosses peak capacity in just a few years creating dissatisfaction towards paying user fee for new infrastructure that apes the old one. This panel examines the issues involved and what correctives could be applied.
